Many Uses of Equipment Explained in 15 Hour Course To Volunteers.

This week the members of the Truckee Volunteer Fire Department are attending school. They are learning the intricate features of the new inhalator and after the 15-hour course will be qualified to operate the apparatus effectively and efficiently.

Their teacher is Carl J. Kistle, instructor of fire training in the bureau of trade and industrial education from Sacramento. Kistle said the classes in this particular work are new but are rapidly gaining in demand.

The new Emerson Inhalator, he said, is a modern machine with many capabilities if properly applied. It may be used successfully on many of the following troubles: carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide gas victims or on a number of other poisonous gas causes; drowning, electric shock, smothering, hanging, choking, crushed by cave-ins, new born babies, alcoholism and alcoholic poisoning, heart trouble, embolism, asthma, diphtheria or croup, paralysis, skull fractures and for various other purposes.

Kistle warns that the department should be given the benefit of any doubt and that the machine be asked for before the patient is too far gone. Every second counts, he pointed out.

Whether you realize it or not, there are a number of men and boys in Truckee who are devoting their spare time on Sundays and holidays getting the ski slopes and the up-ski and jumps in condition for the approaching season. These fellows are not working for self gain or glory, but are only anxious that Truckee—through its Outing Club—can be in a position to step into the front when the winter sports season opens. We owe these workers a sincere vote of thanks and that isn't all—we should get out there and give them a hand, either financially or physically.

One of our pet subjects since being in Truckee has been the Christmas tree "racket." We have attempted to point out the losses which are incurred annually through the uncontrolled cutting by nearly everyone who takes a notion to go into the lucrative business. Through our columns we have not harmed legitimate dealers nor the authorized cutter, but we are informed by forest service officials that we have aided them. Steps have been taken and are being gradually increased to put the industry on a fair and lawful basis. This is an accomplishment which should not go unnoticed. There are now more enforcement officers in the field, permits are being issued only to those known to be legitimate agents by the forest service and closer watch is being maintained to preserve the forests. While we may not agree with our informants that the controlled cutting of trees is a help rather than a handicap, at least we approve of the action being taken by federal and private owners in protecting as much of the forests as possible under existing laws and at the same time protecting the interests of legitimate dealer and cutter.

With both Thanksgivings now over our thoughts naturally turn to Christmas and many are already making up gift lists. This year, as in the past, local merchants have invested heavily in Christmas stocks and are offering values which defy competition. Why not make it a 100 per cent trade a home Christmas this year?

P. T. A. COMMITTEE DISCUSSES PLANS FOR YULE PARTY

An executive meeting of the Truckee Union Parents and Teachers Association was held last night at Mrs. S. M. Richardson's home. Plans for the annual community Christmas entertainment were discussed. This year it will be in the form of a Christmas Pageant, the details of which are yet to be worked out.

It was also announced that Miss Marion Lothrop's room in the high school won the award for the largest attendance of parents and friends at the October meetings and Mrs. Grant Watkins' grammar school class won in November. Parents are urged to attend and bring a guest to the meetings to help their children's class win the top honors.

Tomorrow night, Nov. 28, at the grammar school a party for Miss Lothrop's class will be held. The class will be the guests of the rest of the school as their reward for bringing in the most members in the annual PTA membership drive. There will be dancing, refreshments and games under sponsorship of the parents.

The next regular meeting of the PTA will be held at the high school on Friday evening, December 5, at 8 p.m.

Fire Monday Razes Partly Constructed Sugar Bowl Lodge

Contractors, Owner Lose Equipment, Fixtures In Unexplained Fire.

Fire starting from undetermined origin Monday evening completely destroyed the big new home of Leonard Rennick of San Francisco which was nearing completion in the Sugar Bowl on Donner Summit.

The new structure, a three-story affair, was one of several being erected in the popular winter sport area and was located near the new Zellerbach place.

Jack Wolert of Truckee was the contractor and lost a large number of valuable tools and building equipment in the blaze. Other losers were Lyle Smith, electrical contractor of the project, and George Pace, who was in charge of the plumbing.

Workmen had left the building on Monday evening and everything was apparently all right at that time. Shortly before eight o'clock the blaze was discovered and in spite of efforts of volunteers to stop the spread, the structure was soon reduced to ashes. Aside from the materials, tools and equipment, valuable furnishings and fixtures, recently shipped to the new home by the owner, were lost.

CHRISTMAS CLUB TO DISTRIBUTE $17,000 HERE THIS SEASON

This week-end Bank of America will put more than 300,000 checks in the mail, timed to reach as many Christmas Club members throughout California on the morning of December 1. Total disbursement represented by these checks will exceed $18,000,000.

In this community alone, approximately $17,000 will be paid out to 200 club members, according to figures just released by Yell Nobles, manager of Bank of America in Truckee.

"This ready cash," remarked Nobles, "painlessly accumulated during the past twelve months, will prove very welcome to the Christmas Club members, providing funds to meet tax bills, defense bond purchases and Christmas shopping requirements."

The banker also pointed out that the statewide total is $2,000,000 higher than last year's record mark, an increase of 12.5 per cent, indicating that more and more citizens are learning to organize their savings, strengthening the economic structure and yielding profit to themselves and their communities.

It was announced that the 1942 Christmas Club is now open, and that enrollments are being accepted daily at the local branch of Bank of America.

Nearly 5,000 miscellaneous rodents were collected of which 4,847 were examined for plague, Dr. Brown said.

Nearly 35,000 fleas were taken from rodents. Plague was demonstrated in five pools of fleas and 19 ground squirrels, the state health officer said.

FOREST OFFICIALS ADMIT SHORTAGE OF YULE TREES

Scarcity of Christmas trees to the primary routes of travel has forced the officials of the Tahoe National Forest to limit free cutting of trees for the coming holiday season.

"The available supply of Christmas trees is scarcely enough to serve the people residing within the boundaries of the national forest and those living immediately adjacent thereto," states Guerdon Ellis, forest supervisor. "Accordingly, permits are limited to 1,000 trees this year to local residents only so that the supply may be continuous in that amount for years to come."

Free permits will be issued as usual by the various district rangers of the Tahoe forest and at the supervisor's office at Nevada City and will be limited strictly to one tree to a family. Permits will be issued for the period of December 1 to 24 inclusive, between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. on week days and 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on Saturdays. No permits will be issued on Sundays. "We regret exceedingly," states Ellis, "that we shall be unable to issue free Christmas tree permits to residents of the Sacramento valley and the bay area."

My Place In The Sun

by DOUG BARRETT

When Juanita "The Duchess" Spinnelli died in the gas chamber at San Quentin last Friday most of our metropolitan contemporaries chalked her up as the first woman in California to pay the supreme penalty for murder. But, alas, even this small shred of "honor" does not rightfully belong to her unlamented memory. On July 4, 1851, according to Chapman's Magazine, an attractive Spanish woman—also named Juanita—stabbed a young miner in Downieville who tried to force entrance into her house. A miner's court was organized and although Stephen J. Fields, later a justice of the United States Supreme Court, defended her, she was convicted and hanged from a bridge over the Yuba River. She accepted her fate gracefully, calmly bidding goodbye to her friends in the crowd of 3,000 and held up her long hair while the noose was placed under her chin. It was in Truckee that 20th Century Queen of Crime stumbled into the hands of officers, nearly got away from them and where she last enjoyed freedom.

Thought for the next month: December is the worst month of the year for traffic accidents. Drive carefully if you want to enjoy the holidays.

A belated but enthusiastic "Many Happy Returns" go forth from me to thee, Tina Gini, on your recent birthday anniversary.

I am following with interest the progress of the Curry county (Ore.) and Siskiyou (Calif.) county folks who are attempting to break away from their respective states. Some here in Truckee believe that we would better off in Nevada and some Nevadans claim the whole eastern slope of the Sierra would be in their state if it hadn't been for a crooked survey. Then there is the perennial agitation to split California at the Tehacapi Mountains and we mustn't overlook all the people who want to give California back to the Indians. But it's my guess that the sturdy golden bear will bear up and come out in one piece...

Our Every-Day Battle

Politically Speaking

by JOHN W. DUNLAP

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 27 —(UP)—Warden Clyde Plummer of Folsom prison has broken into the headlines again with his discharge of Captain of the Guard William J. Ryan, a veteran of 28 years in the prison's service.

Apparently the situation has been coming to a head for some time, although it is no secret that Plummer would have preferred to have a guard captain of his own choosing during the past four years he has been warden. And with the prison board expecting to act on his reappointment in a few days, Plummer had a difficult problem on his hands. Ryan was the hero of the attempted prison break in 1937 which cost the lives of Warden Clarence Larkin and a guard and two convicts. Five convicts were executed for their part in the riot.

There was some sentiment that Ryan be named warden to succeed Larkin but he was recovering from serious injuries in a hospital and former Governor Frank Merriam settled the controversy by choosing Plummer, a politically unknown retired deputy police chief from Los Angeles. Plummer kept Ryan as captain of the guard, upon his recovery, although the warden has sole authority to choose his staff.

Presumably the bone of contention was the sporadic candidacy of Ryan to succeed Plummer as warden. Ryan disclaimed responsibility for what his friends may have done on the outside about his possibility of becoming warden.

The wardenship of a prison is a mighty dangerous job and one that few men feel qualified to hold. There is a constant danger of dissensions

BIG GAME!

An old California custom comes to the fore when those ancient rivals, Stanford and California, meet on the gridiron at Palo Alto next Saturday afternoon.

Come lean years or prosperous ones, war crises abroad or domestic blues at home, the contest for victory and gridiron glory between these schools has proved a magnet to nearly 100,000 persons one Saturday afternoon in every November.

It matters not that the Stanford Indians may more than once have bitten the dust that particular season, or that the California Bear may limp onto the greensward bruised and bleeding from previous contests. The loyalty of their staunch supporters does not waver with the ebb and flow of football fortune—where the Big Game is at stake. Their allegiance survives throughout the seasons when Lady Luck refused to smile on their favorite, knowing that in this most famous of battles even the lowly underdog may be charged with the fiery fighting spirit that spells a startling triumph.

With the strain of martial music rising into the autumnal sky, with the pageantry and pomp of half-time parade formations and the eye-dazzling legerdemain of card stunts, the Big Game takes the sage, offering to a legion of spectators a brief respite from the world of wars and worries.

It's kick-off time! The battle has begun, and a multitudinous chorus of voices rises to cheer the ancient rivals on to victory.

Within the prison. In the case of Ryan and Plummer, for example, there was always the possibility of one factor feeling that Ryan should be warden and another favoring Plummer, the guards, being only human, would favor one or the other, which would not be as desirable as having all the guards wholeheartedly for whoever was warden at the time.

Under the existing system, the warden has full authority to surround himself with men sympathetic with his administration, much as the owner of a business would not long employ a sub-executive who was not in full accord.

It is very likely, in Ryan's case, that over ambitious friends on the outside kept him in hot water.

While the Ryan ouster admittedly complicates the picture, the dogs still favors Plummer to be reappointed P. J. McLaughlin, a member of the prison board and a former police judge of Salinas, has aspirations for the post while Ryan's friends are ever-hopeful that he will get the job the former prison board promised him at the time of the riot.

Since the old board has been replaced completely by the Olson group, and four years have changed conditions, it would be a distinct surprise if he should get the appointment.

Plummer feels rather confident that the reforms he has initiated at the prison, all similar to late one placed in effect by Olson-appointed Warden

TURN YOUR DEFECTS INTO ASSETS

A few years ago there lived in New Bedford, Mass., a girl the people of the town never stared at. But strangers stopped and looked at her openly. The girl was pretty, intelligent and attractive except for one most unfortunate disfigurement. This was a strawberry birthmark which covered half of one side of her face.

Her name was Lydia O'Leary. The home people had become accustomed to seeing Lydia so she was not sensitive; but when she went to college, it was another matter. She realized that her birthmark set her apart from other girls. Dates were hard to get; she suffered as a wall flower. One night she stood alone in the window of her rented room and looked across to where her classmates were having a dance, tears rolled down her cheeks.

When she went to New York to get a job, she tramped from office to office day after day.

One day the personnel manager of a Fifth Avenue department store said, "May I speak to you frankly? I'm convinced you are just the girl we'd like to have, but there is something else to think of. Our clientele is fastidious and I'm sure they wouldn't want to be waited on by a girl with such a large birthmark."

She realized, then, she must get a job where she would not be seen by the public; she succeeded in landing one coloring miniatures. One day a blotch of purple paint splattered on the miniature she was coloring and she daubed on light paint to cover the purple. And it did hide it. An idea shot through her mind: maybe she could cover her own purple mark. She painted it and lo! it disappeared. But when she smiled, the paint cracked. She decided she would find a cream that would hide the mark and not crack. She had studied chemistry at college and with this as a background, she started in to perfect a face cream to serve her purpose. Finally she developed one, and now her idea grew; thanks for this color she could manufacture it and sell it to others afflicted as she was. She developed what she calls "Lydia O'Leary's Covermark." The cream preparation would not only hide birthmarks but stains, elementary acne, X ray burns and varicose veins.

I visited her at 551 Fifth Avenue and saw walls covered with letters from grateful people who say their lives have been changed by her discovery. Doctors expressed appreciation for the psychological as well as the physiological effect it had on their patients. I would not believe she still had her birthmark until she rubbed off the "cover mark". She is no longer self-conscious and when she goes out socially people do not even suspect.

Lydia O'Leary took her liability and turned it into an asset; took something which threatened to ruin her life and made it serve her. Not everybody can capitalize his liability but many can. If you have something which is holding you back, see if you can't make it serve you.

CHAPTER IX

Synopsis

Harley Longstreet, broker, dies on a trolley from poison scratched into his hand by a needle pierced cork in his pocket. He was taking a party of friends, in celebration of his engagement to Cherry Browne, an actress, to his West Englewood home. His partner, DeWitt, DeWitt's daughter, Jeanne, with her fiancé, young Christopher Lord, Cherry's vaudeville friend Pollux, Ahearn, friend of DeWitt, Imperiale, middle aged Latin, and Michael Collins, brawny Irishman, make up the group. District Attorney Bruno and Inspector Thumm, aided by Drury Lane, retired Shakespearean actor, investigate. Each member of this party seems to have some grievance against Longstreet but Thumm and Bruno think DeWitt guilty. Longstreet had had an affair with Fern DeWitt and he had a sinister hold on DeWitt. Lane declares he knows the murderer but identifies him only as Mr. X. Later a man is murdered on ferry while Bruno, Thumm and Lane are waiting to meet the writer of an anonymous letter. DeWitt, whom they meet there by chance, joins them. The murdered man is Conductor Wood of the fatal trolley. Evidently it was he who had written the anonymous note. Lane learns that Felipe Maquinhao of Uruguay are staying at DeWitt's house. Quacey, Lane's attendant, investigates. DeWitt admits he and Longstreet made their fortunes mining in Uruguay but refuses further information. DeWitt is tried for the murder of Wood but the defense brings out the fact that he could not have murdered Wood and pushed his large body over board without disturbing a badly cut finger which several witnesses remembered seeing that night. It was Lane who pointed out this line of defense to DeWitt's attorney.

"That was a remarkable alignment of acts, Mr. Lane. Remarkable," DeWitt's sharp eyes fluttered. "Yet perfectly obvious."

"Not so obvious," DeWitt sighed happily. "You can't know how honored I am by your presence. I know how few public appearances you make."

"True," smiled Lane, "but after all beside the point, Mr. DeWitt. You see I'm afraid my presence is not entirely induced by the earnestness of your invitation. It occurred to me that you might have something to tell me."

"But I can't say anything now. It's a long sordid story, and I don't want to spoil your evening—or my own. It's a special sort of night for me. I've escaped a horrible thing. Jeanne may daughter..." and Lane nodded slowly. Behind the mirror of DeWitt's abstracted eyes there was a vision, he was sure, of Fern DeWitt. Lane felt certain that, in his quiet uncomplaining way, DeWitt still loved the woman who had betrayed him.

"Won't you come down with the rest of my party tonight?" the broker said. "We're all going out to my place in West Englewood—I've arranged a little celebration—if you don't care to stay for the week end, I'll make any further arrangements you may please to command. Brooks is staying the night and we can accommodate you as well as him with linen..." He added in quite another tone: "Tomorrow morning we can have to ourselves. And then I will tell you—what by some magical quality of intuition you expected me to tell you tonight."

Lane placed his hand lightly on the small man's shoulder. "I quite understand. Forget everything—until tomorrow morning."

At a few minutes after midnight the DeWitt party entered the West Shore Railroad terminus in Weehawken.

"Well, our train doesn't leave until 12:13," he said cheerfully and stepped to the ticket window.

Ahearn grasped DeWitt's arm. "Here, John, let me," DeWitt chuckled and said to the clerk: "Six single trip tickets to West Englewood, please."

"There are seven of us, John," protested Ahearn.

"I know, but I have a fifty-trip book." Then he said dryly: "I suppose I should sue the State for the value of my old trip book. It expired while I was—" He stopped and added abruptly: "Let me have a new fifty trip book, too."

DeWitt tucked the six single tickets and the trip book into the upper left pocket of his vest as he and his party walked down the long concrete platform. The last car was dark and they boarded the second car from the end.

They split into two groups: Jeanne Lord and Imperiale sat well forward in the coach, chattering; DeWitt, Lane, Brooks and Ahearn took places nearer the center, in facing seats.

A tall burly man, hat pulled down low over his eyes, face white and pinched, had entered the car from the forward end. He lurched over the four conversing men and glowered at DeWitt.

Lane glanced up as Brooks said: "You're drunk, Collins. What do you want?"

"Not talking to you, shyster," said Collins in a thick voice. His eyes focused with difficulty on DeWitt. "Like to see you alone." He pushed his hat back on his head, endeavoring to smile.

"Now look here, Collins," said DeWitt. "I've told you repeatedly I can't go anything for you. You know why, and you're making yourself very disagreeable. Can't you see that you're interrupting a private party?"

Collins' red immed eyes became teary. "Listen, DeWitt," he muttered, "you've got to let me talk to you. It's—it's life or death."

DeWitt rose with a sigh, excused himself; and the two men, DeWitt with bent head, Collins speaking rapidly, violently, gesticulating, pleading, peering into DeWitt's averted face—walked toward the rear of the car. DeWitt suddenly left Collins and returned to his three companions.

The broker put his hand into his upper left vest pocket, took out the six single tickets, leaving the new trip book in the pocket, and gave them to Ahearn. Here you are, I don't know how long this pest will take. Conductor will get me later."

DeWitt retraced his steps to where Collins stood in an attitude of action. They passed through the doorway to the rear platform, where instinctively visible for a moment then the three men saw them cross over to stand on the front platform of the last, dim car, passing from view.

At this moment the conductor entered from the forward door, beginning to collect and punch tickets. Lord referred the conductor to them, looking around and seeming surprised at DeWitt's absence. The conductor approached; Ahearn offered him the six tickets, explaining there was another man in the party who had stepped out a moment and would be back shortly.

The conductor moved up the car. The three men engaged in desultory conversation. Twice Lane peered backward; but neither DeWitt nor Collins was visible.

The local staggered to a stop at Bogota, a suburb of Hackensack then started again. Lane glanced at his watch, saw it was 12:36 and got to his feet so suddenly that Brooks uttered a grunt. "Please excuse me, Mr. Brooks," he said, "Perhaps my nerves are ragged, but I am disturbed by the failure of DeWitt to return."

"You think there's something wrong?" Brooks strode up the aisle with Lane. "Come along, Ahearn."

They went to the rear door of their car. There was no one on the platform. They looked at each other as Lane went over and peered through the glass into the dim rear car. It was evidently an extra coach being hauled to the end of the line for an early morning rush. His jaw hardened, and he said distinctly: "I am going in here, gentlemen. Mr. Brooks, will you please hold the door open? There's very little light."

For a moment the three men stood squinting. Then Lane turned his head abruptly, sucked in his breath...

To the left of the door was the usual cubicle found at the entrance of day coaches. On the seat opposite the front wall, head on breast, was the figure of John DeWitt.

Lane's eyes narrowed. "DeWitt!" he said in a steely voice, shaking the quiet figure. The head rolled slightly bringing into view the blank eyes of a corpse.

Lane crouched and his hand hovered about the man's heart. He straightened up, rubbed his fingers together and backed out of the compartment. "There's blood on my hand," he said. "Please keep that door open. Mr. Brooks, we need light. At least until we can get someone to turn on the proper switch." He stepped past Ahearn and Brooks to the platform. "Do not touch him. Either of you," he said sharply.

Larkin overhead, Lane pulled the emergency signal cord. With a grinding of brakes the train jerked to a stop. Ahearn and Brooks clutched at each other to keep from falling.

Lane stepped across the car junction and opened the door to the car in which they had been seated. The door at the opposite end burst open and two conductors ran up the aisle. Instantly the passengers sensed something wrong. Jeanne and Lord looked up, startled; Imperiale got to his feet, a questioning look on his face.

"Who pulled that emergency?" cried the first conductor, a small choleric man.

Lane said in a low voice: "There has been a serious accident. Please come back here with me." Jeanne Lord and Imperiale had run toward them; the other passengers thronged about asking questions. "Mr. Lord take Miss DeWitt back to her seat. Mr. Imperiale, you might stay here also."

Lane looked significantly at Lord; the young man paled, then forcibly conducted the bewildered girl back through the car. The second conductor, a tall heavy man, began to push the crowding passengers. "Back to your seats."

Lane, accompanied by the two conductors, returned to the rear car. One of the conductors manipulated a switch and the hitherto dim coach sprang into clear light.

The smaller and elder conductor edged into the compartment pointed to the left breast of the dead man. "Bullet hole!" he exclaimed. "Murder." He straightened up. "Well, I'm senior conductor on this train and the law says I'm in charge in any emergency."

"Look here," broke in Brooks, "this is Mr. Drury Lane, and he has been helping on the Longstreet and Wood murders. You must have read about them. This lead man is John DeWitt Longstreet's partner!"

"You don't say," exclaimed the conductor. He looked doubtfully at DeWitt's half hidden face. Then he brightened. "Come to think of it, he does look familiar. Been taking this train a long time. Okay, Mr. Lane. What do you want us to do?"

"Make sure that all doors and even windows are kept locked and guarded at once. Instruct the engineer to run this train to the nearest station."

"There's Teaneck, next stop along the line," volunteered the tall conductor.

"Whatever it is," continued Lane, "make all the speed you can. Arrange to call the New York police—Inspector Thumm, either at headquarters or his home—and District Attorney Bruno of New York County if possible. Also secure whatever authority is necessary to shunt this train into a siding at Teaneck."

"Ahearn, as DeWitt's best friend it will be your unpleasant duty to break the news to his daughter," said Lane.

Better Light
HELPS KEEP EYES RIGHT!

PEOPLE say modern lighting that is "easy on the eyes" makes the eyes feel better... And they are right... Good lighting brings out the beauty of the home furnishings... It aids personal beauty, too.

Light that is glaring brightness or that is dim and gloomy makes hard work of seeing. It causes squints and frowns and scowls and brings on many premature wrinkles and face-lines.

Good, modern lighting merely means the right kind of light, and the right amount of light where you read or sew or use your eyes. And you can have it easily, quickly, inexpensively.

Duce Made It — Anzacs Shoot It

THE SIEGE OF TOBRUK, Allied desert stronghold on the coast of Libya, is past the sixth month, but its out-numbered garrison of Anzacs (Australians and New Zealanders), Poles, British and Indians is holding as firm as ever. Inside the besieged area, which is about the size of Manhattan, life goes on in a primitive way, with much ingenuity in improvising arms and equipment. These men, for example, are members of the new Anzac "bush artillery", formed from infantry men armed with captured Italian guns and munitions. The boys have never learned the professional way of handling their cannon—they aim it by sighting through the hot barrel and working the whole gun until it points at the target—but the "bush artillery" is plenty effective, as testified by the failure of every Axis assault on the thinly-held defense lines.

TRIPLE STUMP FEE ASSESSED ON PAIR FOR TREE CUTTING

Two trespassers, who were classified as innocent because they did not know government land line boundaries, have been required to pay triple stumpage rates for Christmas trees cut without a permit during the current Christmas tree gathering period, according to District Ranger H. I. Snider of Truckee.

Walter Mandeville, Tahoe City, paid $132 for 110 trees cut north of Tahoe City last month, after having the choice of paying this or having the trees confiscated and face the judge for cutting trees without a permit.

On November 18, Louis Euer of Truckee paid $96 for a small load of large size trees cut in the Euer Valley, vicinity where he supposed he was cutting on his own land.

Euer was found hauling the trees Friday by Ranger Snider and E. M. Stone and a check of the area where the trees were cut revealed he cut most of the trees on Tahoe National Forest land and he thought he was cutting on his own land.

Cutters must assume responsibility of finding land boundaries of private land in which they may cut trees Snider said.

George R. Heff, Sacramento, was arrested by Law Enforcement officers of the Tahoe National Forest for the illegal cutting and transportation of approximately 50 Christmas trees. Heff was cited to appear before Judge P. N. Smith at Auburn and was fined $50 and the trees were confiscated.

Two Destroyers Slated To Go Down S. F. Ways November 29, Jan. 15

Two more fighting ships for the United States fleet will go down the ways at the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company's San Francisco yard during the next two months, Rear Admiral J. W. Greenslade, Twelfth Naval District Commandant, announced this week.

The ships, both destroyers, are the WOODWORTH, to be launched at 8 a. m. Saturday, November 29, and the CALDWELL, to be launched January 15.

The WOODWORTH is named for the late Commodore Selim E. Woodworth, USN, whose spectacular career is linked with the early history of California as well as of the United States Navy.

The officer for whom the CALDWELL is named dates still farther back into the Navy's history—Lieut. James R. Caldwell, who was appointed midshipman May 22, 1798, was commissioned lieutenant November 1, 1800, and was killed in action August 7, 1804 during the war with Tripoli.

49TH STATE

Undismayed by the obstacles, California's Siskiyou County and Oregon's Curry County have launched a move to create a brand new state for themselves. Siskiyou wants to get out of California; Curry wants to get in. The prospects for each are so poor there's no alternative but to form a new commonwealth. We doubt if they'll have success, but they'll have fun trying.

TOBACCO TRADITION

The term "the smoke lamp is lit" aboard one of Uncle Sam's ships means the sailors are permitted to smoke. In old days, before matches were invented, an actual oil lamp was lighted to provide the crew with a flame from which to light pipes and cigarettes. Today, the smoking lamp exists in a figurative sense only but the name survives.
